

It's Time to Care.

Letter from the Founders

We live in a world where many people have started to wonder who really cares anymore.

Do the engineers care about the slop we see on their feeds every day?

Do the callers care about whether we really need what they're selling?

Does anyone care about the work they put out or the consequences of its consumption?

You are reading this because you care. You care about doing great work. You care about humanity. And you've made your care your calling. Everything you've done to this point is evidence of the care you pour into this world.

Now we have the honor of caring together with you. At Zingage, we've chosen to care about the caregivers and providers who dedicate their lives to healing those who have no one else.

We've taken up this charge despite easier businesses to build and quicker ways to create wealth.

We chose to build Zingage because a world without this vision is a smaller, sicker, and deadlier world.

We have the privilege to care about this problem because we stand on the shoulders of giants who cared before us. We build on the legacy of industry titans whose infrastructure and technology we use, the lessons from our communities and teachers, and the inspiration from our families and friends who put the care in our hearts.

Don't let your care become fear.

You got here because your care manifested as courage and action – sometimes unsuccessfully, sometimes alone.

Now you are joining a band of builders whose care you can count on.

As you begin your Zingage journey, our request is that you never stop caring. Whether in tough sprints or difficult conversations, keep caring.

In times of momentum and progress when it's easiest to loosen the grip, keep caring. And in times when you've given it your all, we will keep caring about you.

Daniel built apps that crashed
his school network.

Victor sold candy on highways
to keep his family afloat.

Two builders. Same instinct:
fix the systems that fail people.

They met at South Park Commons.

Two founders experimenting at the edge of what's next.

AI for government contracting.
Prediction markets for NFTs.

But none of it felt human enough.

zingage

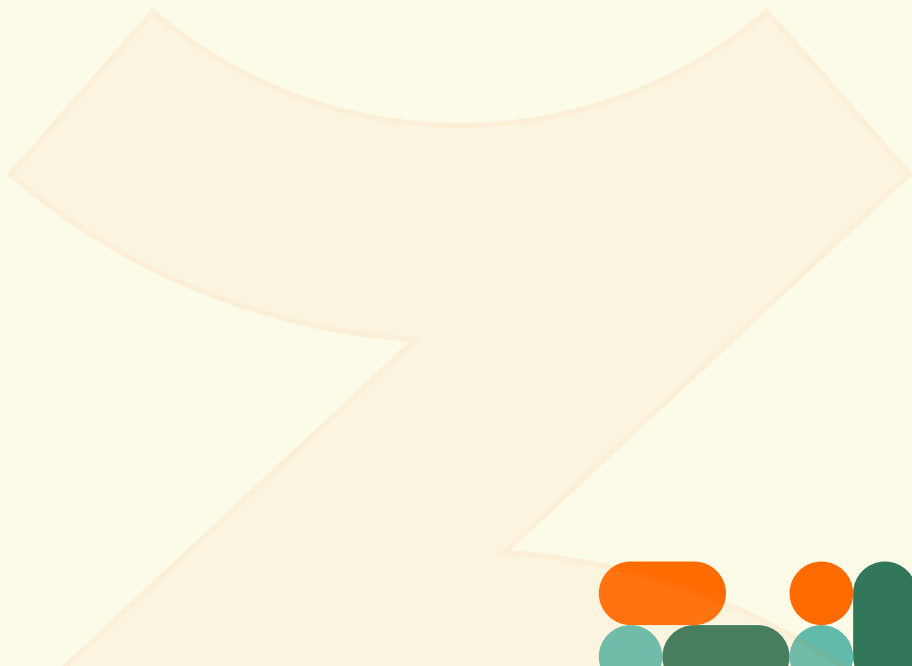

Healthcare was personal.

Daniel's grandfather lived with Alzheimer's.

Victor's grandmother was a nurse who built her own home-care business.

Both saw what happens when systems fail families.

Zingage didn't start in a computer.

We started in back rooms, call centers, and senior centers.

We listened.

We watched.

We worked the phones.

My pleasure. I'm not always sure where the line is but I really feel like you all are part of my team, and since I've not had one yet it's very exciting to me!

Having Zingage makes a big difference. And, like, I used to dread being on call. Like, it used to give me such, like, a level of anxiety because I can't turn it off.

Victor.. I just called and if I spoke with Zin Gage AI bought it was unbelievable! Wow eager to talk tomorrow 🤩 Called and identified myself and said hey could you get a message to have the director of operations call me tomorrow at 8:30 and the conversation was completely normal and could not tell that it was not a person. Clarity on the conversation confirming the number to call back wanted to know if there's anything else they could help with and... Wow!

Zingage's vision healthcare in

on is to bring all
into the home.

Healthcare started in the Home

Healthcare will Return to the Home

Hunt's Law

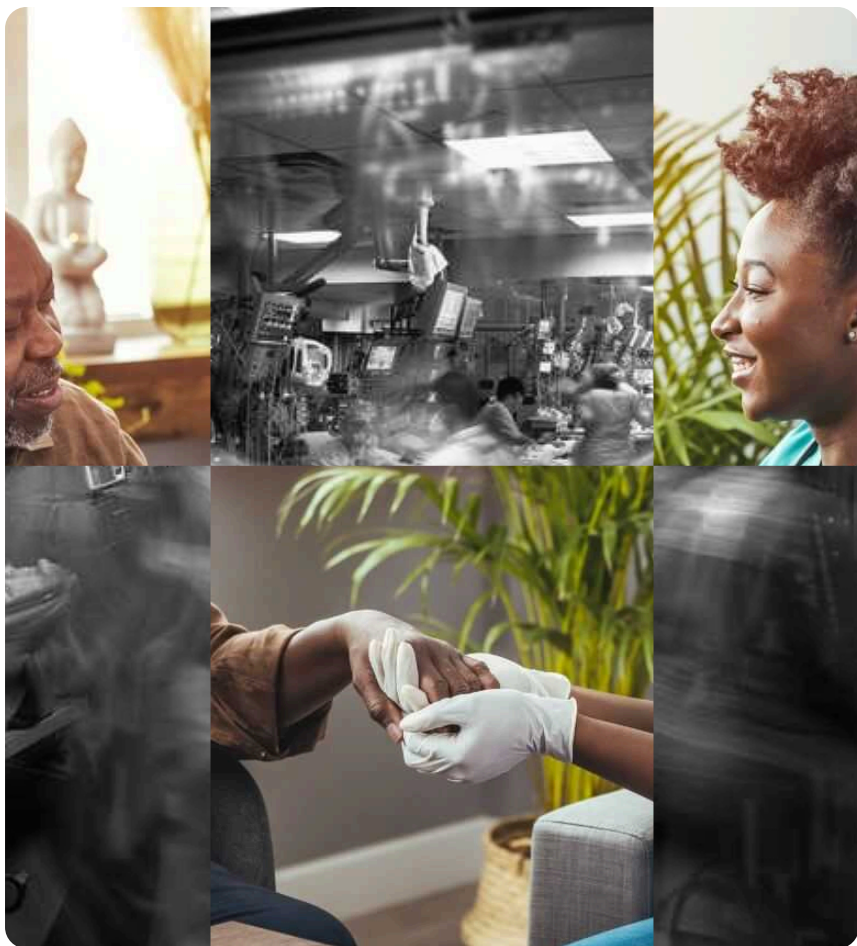

Healthcare in the home will double every 4 years.

Each day, more than 11,000 Americans turn sixty-five. Nine in ten hope to age where life actually happens: at home.

For many, this isn't just a choice of convenience but a necessity beyond their control.

As technology, reimbursement, and necessity converge, the home is becoming the new hospital, the new clinic, the new care continuum.

Every four years, the capacity to deliver care in the home doubles, until "home care" and "healthcare" become the same thing.

zingage

We get there by making care logistics automatic

So that care in
the home can happen

We Do Things The Zingage Way

Customer First

Velocity

Extreme Ownership

Right now, at this moment, there's a caregiver call out that will end in a hospitalization or worse...

It's Time to Build.
